In many metropolitan areas, transportation planning proceeds growth. Seattle seems to do this backwards. Building a high density complex like this in our community is simply wrong. We have seen what has happened to Ballard in this regard. Condominiums with parking and long term tenants builds stability and community. If you can show us a plan for better transportation options for a larger population, I would be happy to hear it. For example, Aurora Blvd for example would be an excellent route for light rail and a change in zoning for high density. Please bit in our community.
