To Whom It May Concern:

Since its inception this project on the City Peoples site has failed to meet the criteria for what should be a sensitive transition into a residential area.

It is too massive and falls into the same destructive category as most of the recent building in Seattle. In the name of providing housing for people the very environment is being destroyed.

Visually boring mass, lack of open space and lack of consideration of light and shadow effects are routinely eating away at the very reasons so many of us were drawn to this city. At the rate we are going Seattle will no more be the Emerald City.

In addition, there is really no need for yet another grocery store as there are 6 or 7 existing without another under construction on the hill along the Madison corridor.

Here is an opportunity to stop this erosion of the quality of life that has made the city so special in the past and which is dying daily because of poor planning, cheap construction and a lack of value being place on supporting a livable environment.

We can and should do better.
